Jelly Roll Cover Up

Like so many quilters today, I have an extension table attached to my sewing machine. So I have designed a sewing machine cover using a Jelly Roll that can be adapted to fit any machine with or without an extension table.

Ingredients:

Featured Fabric Collection - Aster Manor by Three Sisters

One Moda Jelly Roll - 14 strips will be used
3/4 yard backing
20" by 34" batting
1/2 yard binding
Six buttons

Original Recipe can be found at www.modabakeshop.com

Instructions:

After measuring the my machine from end to end to determine the number of 2 ½" strips required, I chose 8 Jelly Roll strips which when sewn together make 16 ½". Depending on the size of your sewing machine you may need more or fewer strips for your cover. Measure across the top of your sewing machine to see if 16 ½" will cover it nicely.

Now you will need to measure how long the strips need to be for your sewing machine. Measure from the tabletop over the high point on your machine and back down to the tabletop.

For my machine I cut five strips 22 1/2" long and three strips 31" long. I sewed the 8 strips together, and then sandwiched them together with batting and backing and quilted a little stipple.

Trim away the excess batting and make bias binding to bind the Jelly Roll Cover-up.

To make the ties, cut two 10" by 2 1/2" strips from each of 6 different Jelly Roll strips.

Organise them into six sets of two strips. Place each set right sides together and sew 1/4" around the edge, rounding the corners and leaving a 2" opening on one of the long sides. Turn them right side out through the 2" opening and press. Whip stitch the opening closed.

Place the Jelly Roll Cover-up over your sewing machine and position and pin the ties in place. Pin one set of ties on the front end and two at the back end. Attach the six ties in place, securing them with a button.

I hope you like this fun little project, and remember to measure your machine to be sure you have your correct measurements.
