

My eyes hath seen the glory of the coming of the Lord...

He is trampling out the vintage where the grapes of wrath are stored...

Julia Ward Howe

In 1862 Julia Ward Howe published the Battle Hymn of the Republic, a moving anthem still sung 150 years later.

He has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat...

The reproduction fabric collection, 1862 Battle Hymn, remembers the first full year of Civil War, its battles and losses. Over 100,000 men died in combat that year at Shiloh, Antietam and Fredericksburg and in smaller battles like Pink Hill, Lone Jack and Seven Pines.

Each soldier left a family to mourn. Americans on both sides, so sure of a 30-day War a year earlier, soon realized 1862 was the beginning of a long, heartbreaking struggle.

I have seen Him in the watch-fires of a hundred circling camps... They have builded Him an altar in the evening dews and damps... I can read His righteous sentence by the dim and flaring lamps...

Muted colors recall the mood of mourning. The original prints date from mid to late-19th-century, many drawn from an 1860s mill sample book. Print styles, fashionable in the 1860s, include an eccentric plaid, small figures in formal repeats and floral trails and a floral spray that might be a cotton boll.

The flag print may date to the 1870s, a postwar celebratory fabric to commemorate the Union's Centennial.
